

Local Man Wins Employee of the Year Award

Ian Gage, Project Manager for Steels Engineering based at Aldermaston, has been presented with an employee of the year award, in recognition of his approach to both the client and his work colleagues.

The award was made by parent company Redhall Group plc, under the category 'Commitment to People' and was presented to Ian at a dinner event held at Oulton Hall Leeds on March the 16th. Tony Goodenough, Managing Director for Steels Engineering commented: "It is Ian's enthusiasm that continues to be his greatest asset. This has seen him gain recognition in delivering projects at both Aldermaston and Burghfield, where his people skills have been most obvious. Ian never takes no for an answer and markets both the Steels business and the Redhall Group in a manner that is befitting that of a Project Manager, whilst always remembering that there are things to be learned along the way."

Ian, who is married with two children, initially joined Steels as a Project Engineer in 2005. In his current role at Burghfield, he combines project delivery with sales, marketing and tendering, to ensure that he, and the people that work for and with him, have continuity of work.

He is pictured (left) receiving his award from John O'Kane, Finance Director, Redhall Group who said: "Ian is enthusiastic, loyal, hard working and personable and a worthy winner of the award. He has consistently delivered some of Steels' highest profile projects ahead of time and budget, generating a significant return for the business."

